

Chronic Condition Coding Awareness: Behavioral & Conduct Disorder

Conduct Disorder

Conduct disorder is a repetitive and persistent pattern of behavior in children and adolescents in which the rights of others or basic social rules are violated¹. It is not uncommon for a child or teen to experience behavioral problems, however, the behavior is considered to be a conduct disorder when it is long-lasting and when it goes against accepted norms of behavior and disrupts the child's or family's everyday life².

Symptoms of Conduct Disorder

Symptoms of conduct disorder vary depending on the age of the child and whether the disorder is mild, moderate, or severe. In general, the symptoms fall into four categories: (1) Aggressive, (2) Non-Aggressive or Destructive, (3) Deceitfulness, and (4) Violation of rules².

Treatment of Conduct Disorder

Treatment for conduct disorder is based on many factors, including the child's age, the severity of the symptoms, as well as the child's ability to participate in and tolerate specific therapies². Treatment usually consists of Psychotherapy, medication, and/or family support group or organization. Appropriate treatment is individualized and should be done by a mental health professional, preferably one who is trained in children's mental health¹.
